

This paper is about people with complex needs in research

It is by Ned Redmore

It says that this group often don't get to take part in research

This means they don't get to tell researchers what's important to them

Sometimes researchers separate people with complex needs from each other

This means it's harder to hear from everyone

Some people get left out

People with complex needs have a lot in common

They go to the same schools

They go to the same support services

They often live together

So Ned says researchers shouldn't separate them

Researchers need to find better ways to listen to them

Researchers need to work together to do this
